PERFORMANCE UPDATE

October's positive market drivers became headwinds in November. Last month we noted that the large AI datacentre investments announced by major tech firms in October might not deliver attractive returns. Indeed, markets have since grown more sceptical of this theme. As a result, most major indices—especially those heavy in technology—fell in November, with Korean and Japanese markets each down over 4%.

Citadel delivered a monthly return of -2.0%, largely due to weaker share prices in its two technology related holdings. The main positive contributors were Village Super Market (+10%) and Pronexus (+9% in JPY), while Samsung Electronics (-11% in KRW) and Sumco (-22% in JPY) were the largest detractors. Citadel's year-to-date return is +5.1% and since inception, Citadel has returned +198%.

PORTFOLIO NEWS

Samsung Electronics (a leading producer of memory chips and smartphones), produced record results, yet its share price declined in November as markets questioned the economics of major AI spending by large tech firms. While this scepticism is understandable, we believe the company is ideally placed to capitalize on the current cycle of large technology investments required over the next few years. It is also much more diversified than many peers. Importantly, Samsung remains quite attractively valued at a >20% free cash flow yield expected for 2026.

Pronexus (a Japanese provider of financial disclosure and investor relations services) reported quarterly results in line with expectations and announced another sizeable share buyback program. Given its low valuation and cash-rich balance sheet, we believe this decision is sensible and enhances shareholder value.

Village Super Market (a regional US grocery chain) saw its share price recover from October's weakness, without specific company-related news. The company will release its next quarterly results in December.
